

ABOUT THE HOUSE...

In 1972 Boyd Andrew opened his own home in Helena as a guesthouse, information center, and halfway house for alcoholic men. Since that modest beginning over 50 years ago, Boyd Andrew Community Services (BACS) has grown from a single office treating primarily adult men with alcohol problems to a nationally recognized program that serves adults and their family members providing assessments, intervention, outpatient, and residential care to Lewis & Clark and Jefferson County residents.

The transitional living facility is Boyd's former home and represents the longest continuous treatment facility in the state of Montana. It is licensed by the Department of Health and Human Services as a treatment facility and is inspected and evaluated annually for compliance with building codes and its treatment contract.

Women's Transitional Living Facility

The Women's Transitional Living Facility (TLF) of Boyd Andrew Community Services is a recovery home for seven adult females and is located in a residential neighborhood in Helena. Residents of the TLF must meet ASAM placement criteria for 3.1 level of care and be referred by a licensed addictions counselor (LAC), probation and parole officers, or self-referred.

To be acceptance into the TLF you will need to complete and submit an application with a copy of a recent substance use disorder evaluation and complete an interview.

About the TLF program

The transitional living facility is a safe place for residents to begin building sober supports and confidence in themselves

Residents will work with the knowledgeable and compassionate therapists at Boyd Andrew Community Services. Residents will complete groups that support their recovery and long-term sobriety goals.

Residents will have the opportunity to gain education, skills, employment, and to create a support system in the community.
